At Least They Can Hope.

mmera were given there years during which they can, at least, hope for better things by the Frazier-Lemke moratorium hill algred by the President to repiace and correct a similar measure which was held unconstitutional. The measure, in effect, brings debt-ridden Technocracy's Answer.

Organized Industry has complled figures which throw some light upon the offrepeated statement that invention of "labor saving" machinery has been a major cause of unemployment. It does not answer the contention but it brings some interesting facts for consideration,

The investigation disclosed that 18 industries unknown in 1879 were giving omployment to 1,123,314 workers be years inter in industry alone. Electricity and the automobile accounted for two-thirds of the gain, the rest being distributed over other modern industries. It does not take into account the employment given in nonmanufacturing pursuits as the result of these inventions. The motion picture industry, for example, is credited only with the number of men employed in manuincluding enchlors and not with the thouannds engaged in using them. During the same half century the numher of wage earners employed in industry increased from 4,944 for each 100,000 of po lation to 7,273 and 40 per cent of this increase represented persons employed in new Industries.

Machines have thrown men out of work in many lines of manufacture but new inventious have, in all previous singes of davelopment, provided more jobs.

The survey takes industry up only to the beam days of 1020 and does not promise that expansion will find places for those who has been unemployed since that

When Building Begins.

The thing which the United States needs as much as anything to bring about definite recovery is a return of the building industry to that sinte of activity which will balance the accumulated deficiency in new houses,

The average of building construction in the country is only 36 per cent of normal according to government figures. That is only as parl of the story. Since the early part of 1929 building has been for below normal and a dearth of homes has reaulted. Most cities now face on actual shorings of desirable houses and to meet the altuation and overcome the deficaency a construction rate considerably above normal will be required.

The government is disappointed at the lethning apparent in the Industry Tho FRA and private banking interests have both tried to stir the public to setton but the result is far less then they had

New building has not kept pace with the main) withdrawni of houses from use In many cities there are fower dwellings available for use today than there were In 1020.

The reason probably lies in the fact that depression years absorbed the coserve funds of many who otherwise would be builders. Even though the government agency he liberal in He help the would-be home owner cannot hulld without some funds of his own and many lack the required assets to qualify for loans. Despite the next and the desire for new houses, the probability of any marked been in the building trades is not found in an inspection of the immediate signs.

Tydings was window-dressed to a fare-yes-well at the recent session of confress. He did a swell job of putting himself over on Capitol Hill and took special pains to make no confine.

Recorse

Secretary Morgenthau's mistake was thus not so much in pursuing the auction method—but in allowing his "cheap money complex" to run away with his judgment. He made no attempt to calculate the receptivity of the market in advance and ignored the recent tendency of investing institutions to demand higher yields. Perhaps his unbroken acting of successes with earlier offerings had made him careleas.

As to confidence—shrewd observers contend that in a curious backbanded way the lizzle actually proved that long-term confidence is increasing. Here's how.

In a period of fear and uncertainty—such as the one through which we have been passing—banks and large investors want nothing but short-term super-liquid stuff. They are then willing to accept fabulously low rates for a cept fabulously low rates for a continuation.
